Nola M Ries, BA(Hon), JD, MLP, LLM is Associate Professor in Health Law, Faculty of Law, University of Technology Sydney, Australia and External Research Fellow, Health Law Institute, Faculty of Law, University of Alberta, Canada. Nola has expertise in health law and policy, with a particular focus on: law, ageing and health; legal aspects of health system reform; governance of health research; regulation of health practitioners; public health law; and health technology regulation. Nola publishes widely in legal, health and policy journals, with over 50 peer-reviewed articles and approximately 45 book chapters, major reports, commissioned papers and other publications. Nola previously practiced law in Canada, primarily in human rights and constitutional litigation, and provided legal consulting services to government departments and health professional organisations.

Elizabeth Tobin-Tyler, JD, MA, is Assistant Professor of Family Medicine at the Alpert Medical School and of Health Services, Policy and Practice at the Brown University School of Public Health. At the Medical School, she also serves as the Co-Director of the Scholarly Concentration in Advocacy and Activism. She teaches in the areas of health policy, health equity and public health law and ethics. Her research focuses on the role of law and policy in the social determinants of health, community-based and health system interventions that address health disparities, and interprofessional medical-legal education. Liz is a national expert in the development of medical-legal partnerships, which integrate medicine, public health and legal services to identify, address and prevent health-harming social and legal needs of patients, clinics and populations.

Amy Waller, BA(Hons), PhD, is an Australian Research Council Discovery Early Career Research Fellow and an Investigator in the Priority Research Centre for Health Behaviour, Faculty of Health and Medicine, University of Newcastle, Australia. Her research focuses on behavioural aspects of health with special interests in end of life issues, palliative care, psychosocial wellbeing and caregiver/support person wellbeing. Amy's current focus is on the preferences and experiences of patients, families and health care providers in relation to end of life decision making across a range of settings including outpatient oncology, acute care and palliative care settings. She is leading innovative community action approaches to improve advance care planning through cross-sector collaboration.

Bernadette Richards, BA, LLB (Hons), PhD is Associate Professor of Law at the University of Adelaide, Australia. She teaches in the areas of medical law and ethics, bioethics and tort law. An active researcher, she has completed major projects on organ donation, consent to treatment and legal issues around innovative surgery. She is a chief investigator of a current National Health and Medical Research Council-funded Partnership Grant, "Strategies for the inclusion of vulnerable populations in developing complex and sensitive public policy: A case study in Advance Care Planning." She has published over 40 journal articles and book chapters.
